Ref: Docket 2007-421-T

When making a decision on instituting a maximum rate tariff the advantages and disadvantages to the consumer need to be addressed. My opinion is that maximum rate tariff would not serve the consumer as well as the current tariff that is now in place.

As I have seen in the past with the tariff on a national level the consumer becomes very confused with the discounting process that occurs. With this type of tariff you are giving the advantage to the mover in that the mover decides what service that they would discount and at what level of discount.

With the current tariff there is consistency, with a maximum rate tariff there is no consistency. If a consumer is being moved from or to a small rural community the mover will be more likely to charge more under a maximum rate tariff to the consumer.

Please keep in mind that if South Carolina implements a maximum rate tariff it will be adopting the same system for pricing moves that was abolished by the federal government on the national level for pricing interstate moves.

Sincerely,

Anthony P. Cook, President
